PREFACE

During the past few years a widespread interest in the European Economic Community (frequently referred to as the Common Market) has developed within the United States. Many inquiries have been received by the United States Department of Agriculture relating to agricultural statistics of the Common Market. To meet this demand for information, the Regional Analysis Division and the Development and Trade Analysis Division of the Economic Research Service have compiled data pertaining to the production, utilization, and trade of agricultural commodities for Common Market members; Greece, which is an associate; and those countries which are currently applicants for full membership (Denmark, Ireland, Norway, and the United Kingdom). In addition, the Development and Trade Analysis Division has compiled selected data on the financial, monetary, income, and population aspects of these countries.

Because of the magnitude of the information gathered, the publication has been divided into two volumes. Volume I contains trade, financial, monetary, income, and population information; Volume II contains acreage, yield, production, and utilization data. The material contained in both volumes has been taken from official sources and includes data not readily available in the United States.

This volume has been prepared in the Development and Trade Analysis Division under the direct supervision and guidance of Robert L. Tontz and Alex D. Angelidis. Other persons who assisted in the composition of tables and/or preparation of the text included Catherine D. Cograve, Warrick E. Elrod, Arthur B. Mackie, Robert K. Meahl, Jiryis S. Oweis, Gabrielle P. Rice, McGehee H. Spears, Helen H. White, and Lorraine W. Wilbur.

STATISTICS ON THE EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Volume I--AGRICULTURAL TRADE AND FINANCE

Development and Trade Analysis Division
Economic Research Service

Introduction

As now constituted, the European Economic Community (EEC) -- or Common Market -- is an economic union of six European countries -- Belgium, France, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, and West Germany -- plus Greece, which is an associate (fig. 1). More than 16 overseas political entities, chiefly African countries, are associated with the Common Market by a Convention of Association, which expired December 31, 1962, and is in the process of extension through negotiation. The associated overseas countries and territories (referred to as associated overseas countries in the tables in this volume) enjoy special trade and aid benefits from the EEC but are not a part of the EEC customs union since they reserve the right to establish individual tariffs on imports not only from non-EEC countries but also from EEC countries. Other European countries are interested in associating themselves with the Common Market. The United Kingdom, Norway, Denmark, and Ireland have applied for full membership while Austria, Switzerland, Sweden, Spain, and Turkey have applied for associate status (according to information obtained from the European Community's Washington office in May 1962).

The population of the current six member countries plus Greece is about 180 million. If the Common Market expands by addition of new members and associates in Europe, its population would be about 320 million, considerably greater than the 185 million in the United States. Adding the population of current and prospective overseas associates would make a grand total of more than 485 million.

Volume of Trade

The Common Market is the largest market in the world for agricultural products, and it is also the largest market for United States farm product exports. In calendar year 1961, the United States shipped about $1.2 billion of farm products to the Common Market out of total farm product exports to all areas amounting to $5 billion. Shipments included $238 million of cotton, $195 million of feed grains, $186 million of wheat and wheat flour, $155 million of soybeans and vegetable oils, and $96 million of tobacco. Large quantities of lard, tallow, fruits, vegetables, meats (including poultry meat), hides and skins, rice, and other products were also shipped to the Common Market. Exports to the Common Market accounted for 23 percent of all U.S. farm product exports and one-third of U.S. exports of farm products sold for dollars in 1961.

1/ Total agricultural exports were compiled from official records, U.S. Bureau of the Census; data on commercial sales and Government program exports were compiled in the Trade Statistics and Analysis Branch, Development and Trade Analysis Division.

2/ Present members include Belgium, France, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, and West Germany as full members and Greece as an associate. Greece may eventually become a full member.

3/ Potential members include Denmark, Ireland, Norway, and United Kingdom as full member applicants; Austria, Sweden, and Switzerland as applicants for association only; and Spain and Turkey as applicants for association leading to possible full membership. A number of African and other overseas countries and territories are "associates." The summary excludes trade with these associates, which equaled 9 percent of total U.S. agricultural exports to the present and potential Common Market members and nearly half of total U.S. agricultural imports from the present and potential Common Market countries in 1961.

Agricultural exports to the Common Market in 1961 were $4\frac{1}{2}$ times the value of agricultural imports from that area, which amounted to $221 million. The principal U.S. imports were Dutch hams; French and Italian wines; Italian cheese; Dutch tulip and other bulbs; Italian, German, and Dutch vegetable oils; and Dutch and German cocoa and chocolate. Many of the imported products were specialty items which added to the variety of the American diet and contributed to the high standard of American living. The United States and the Common Market together accounted for 37 percent of world agricultural exports and 52 percent of world agricultural imports in 1960.

U.S. farm products accounting for about 70 percent of our total agricultural exports to the EEC are expected to share in the future growth of EEC markets as Common Market import needs increase. Exports that will likely expand include cotton, soybeans and soybean oilcake and meal, tallow, hides and skins, and some fruits. On the other hand, increased protection to Common Market producers may lead to reduced use of U.S. commodities such as cereals -- wheat and wheat flour, feed grains, and rice -- as well as of tobacco, vegetable oils, poultry meat, and some fruits.

History of the Common Market

In 1957 the Treaty of Rome, which laid the foundations for the Common Market, was signed by representatives of the six member countries. The Treaty and the Common Market came into effect on January 1, 1958. The Common Market did not suddenly occur but was rather the culmination of a series of important events which prepared the way for European economic and political integration. In 1947 the United States announced the "Marshall Plan" (the European Recovery Program) as a means of assisting European recovery from the ravages of the war. In 1948 the Organization for European Economic Cooperation (OEEC) was created to help carry out the Marshall Plan through joint estimates of requirements and coordination in the distribution of Marshall Plan aid among the affected countries. In 1948, also, the first concrete step toward country integration in Western Europe occurred when the Benelux Customs Union was established, covering Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxembourg. A year later the North Atlantic Treaty was signed. Then came the three European Community organizations: The European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC) in 1951; the European Atomic Community (Euratom) in 1958; and the European Economic Community (EEC) also in 1958.

Aims

The Treaty of Rome -- probably the most significant political and economic action in Western Europe during the last 300 years -- states that the purposes of the Common Market are to establish the foundation of an ever closer union among the peoples of Europe and to end the conflicts that had divided Western Europe for so long. Although the Treaty itself deals with economic affairs, it clearly implies that countries whose economies are closely integrated will tend to develop common views in respect of major political matters.

Matters included in the Treaty cover all major segments of economic life, such as free movement of capital and labor, harmonization of wage rates, conditions of employment, health and retirement benefits, the right of free business establishment, agricultural policy, coordinated fiscal and monetary policies, and common commercial policies covering trade in both agricultural and non-agricultural products. Both an investment bank for the member countries and a development fund to aid associated overseas countries and territories are also included in this plan.

The United States Government is wholeheartedly supporting the development and further expansion of the Common Market as a means of strengthening both the peaceful tendencies of Western Europe and its economic and political position. An integrated Western Europe would be a powerful ally in the struggle between the free peoples of the West and the totalitarian powers of the East. United States history indicates that the stimulating effects on international economic development and trade by the elimination of tariffs and other barriers to free economic enterprise should be enormous. The maintenance of a free internal market has contributed to the rapid, powerful, and continuing growth of the United States.

Common Agricultural Policy

In January 1962, after long and strenuous discussion, the EEC Council of Ministers, the policymaking body of the organization, "approved the essentials of the first common agricultural policy of Europe." 1/ As pointed out by the EEC Commission, the executive branch of the organization, this policy involves fundamental innovations in agricultural policy. It is described by the Commission as the first detailed legislative code on agriculture ever to be adopted by Europe or, for that matter, by any nation, for there is "no precedent for such a complex of measures adopted concurrently and as an organic whole." 1/ A transitional period of 7½ years is provided for gradual implementation of the Common Agricultural Policy.

As an aid in understanding this complex situation, one may compare the language of Article 39 of the Treaty of Rome, which sets out 5 objectives of the Common Agricultural Policy, with that in the Commission release of January 1962. 2/

> Article 39. 1. The common agricultural policy shall have as its objectives:
> (a) to increase agricultural productivity by developing technical progress and by ensuring the rational development of agricultural production and the optimum utilisation of the factors of production, particularly labour;
> (b) to ensure thereby a fair standard of living for the agricultural population, particularly by the increasing of the individual earnings of persons engaged in agriculture;
> (c) to stabilize markets;
> (d) to guarantee regular supplies; and
> (e) to ensure reasonable prices in supplies to consumers.

1/ European Economic Community. A Farm Policy for Europe. Official Spokesman of the Commission, January 1962, p. 5.

2/ See page 6 of reference cited in footnote 1.

2. In working out the common agricultural policy and the special methods which it may involve, due account shall be taken of:

(a) the particular character of agricultural activities, arising from the social structure of agriculture and from natural disparities between the various agricultural regions;

(b) the need to make the appropriate adjustments gradually; and

(c) the fact that in Member States agriculture constitutes a sector which is closely linked with the economy as a whole.

Commission statement

The Commission statement which appeared after Council action on the Common Agricultural Policy is as follows:

> The broad principles of the Common Agricultural Policy are much simpler than its complex details might suggest. In general, it has four objectives:
> To balance supply and demand within the Community and in its external trade, by action on supply (more regional specialization, stockpiling and structural reform) and demand (improvement of quality, etc.).
> To provide a fair income to farmers -- especially family holdings -- by structural and regional improvements.
> To stabilize agricultural markets by protecting them from speculative price fluctuations without cutting them off from the influence of long-term movements in the world markets.
> To ensure a fair deal to consumers by enabling the processing industries and trade to find external outlets at reasonable and competitive prices, and by preventing prices from being fixed on the basis of marginal production costs.
> When all these objectives are attained there will be at the end of the transition period a full Common Market for agricultural products throughout the community.

These broad principles of the Common Agricultural Policy will be implemented through the following activities:

1. Control of farm products through common marketing authorities.

2. Gradual establishment of common prices for some farm products and equalization of internal trading conditions for others during a forthcoming transitional period of about $7\frac{1}{2}$ years.

3. Import controls through variable levies or fees together with stipulated minimum import prices and, in some cases, quantitative import controls.

4. The use of funds derived from import levies and fees to finance improvements in agricultural production and marketing operations and domestic price supports and to subsidize exports.

5. Establishment of common quality standards.

6. Harmonization of veterinary, plant health, and similar regulations.

Prices and levies

During the transitional period, i.e., until 1970, each member country will adjust its internal prices for those commodities having target prices toward the developing common level of target prices within the Community. In like fashion, each country will continue adjusting its level of external tariffs on other agricultural commodities toward the common external tariff level for the Community.

Procedures and criteria for establishment of variable levies, target prices, intervention prices, sluice gate or minimum import prices, conversion factors for equalization of differing feed costs in the production of livestock products, conditions permitting the imposition of quantitative import controls, quality standards or norms and many other features of the EEC marketing regulations may be obtained from the EEC Information Office, Southern Building, Room 236, Washington 5, D.C. As of October 1, 1962, more than 125 separate marketing regulations and amendments thereto had been published by the Community.

These policies and their implementing regulations reflect longstanding views and practices in European agriculture. They are imbedded in the history of wartime food scarcities, in policies whose effect is to maintain substantial rural population, and in longstanding attempts to raise incomes of farmers and farm workers toward parity with incomes of the nonagricultural population. The achievement of agricultural income parity in the Common Market is hindered by the very small size of farms and the difficulties, even with advanced scientific and technical know-how, of making these small farms efficient operating units. There are about 9 million farms in the six Common Market countries, and slightly more than 5 million of these are 12 acres or smaller in size. The overall average size is about 20 acres. However, more than half of the entire cultivated area consists of farms of less than 50 acres, which with certain exceptions is the smallest size, it is generally believed, that can be developed into technically efficient farms.

Internal farm product prices, particularly for cereals, show wide differences among the six member countries, and the job of developing common cereal prices will be extraordinarily difficult. There is concern that the reconciliation will result in unduly high cereal prices. This will tend to encourage further expansion in cereal production in Western Europe, and to discourage a continued increase in consumption of livestock products, thus resulting in lower import needs for wheat and feed grains. The United States Government has been urging the Common Market authorities to adopt levels of internal farm product prices, particularly grains, which would encourage more efficiency in production and also to develop nondiscriminatory trade regulations. The United States is eager to see a strong and dynamic Common Market developed in Western Europe, but it hopes to avoid the serious economic consequences to United States farm exports which a highly protectionist Common Market trade policy would cause.

Agricultural Imports

The basic import tables in this volume have been divided into two major country groups: (1) Imports by the present European Economic Community (tables 1-66) and (2) imports by the present European Economic Community plus Greece and the four applicants for full membership (Denmark, Ireland, Norway, and the United Kingdom) (tables 67-187). In each country group, data have been shown for the aggregate of the countries in the group and for each individual country as well. Data have been provided on total, agricultural, and nonagricultural imports, and on 10 major EEC import commodities that are important to American agriculture. In each country group, information has been included on imports by origin: From all countries, from the group as a whole (EEC or EEC plus Greece and four applicants), from countries outside the group, from the United States, and from all other countries. The tables indicate how imports from the United States -- measured in both quantity and value -- compare with imports from other areas. The discussion which follows relates only to the first country group, i.e., the European Economic Community. Other tables have been included in this volume to show additional information on trade in specified years.

For agricultural commodities as a whole, the United States has been holding its own in the EEC import market during the past 8 years while other countries as a group have been falling a bit short of maintaining their collective share. Common Market agricultural imports from the United States averaged 13 percent of the total value of EEC agricultural imports in 1957-60, or just as much as in 1953-55. On the other hand, EEC imports from other countries (excluding intra-EEC trade) declined from 73 percent of the total in 1953-56 to 70 percent in 1957-60. Inasmuch as the United States has not picked up what the other countries lost, it is presumed that the EEC countries have advanced further along the path to self-sufficiency.

Ten commodities -- with an import value of $1 billion -- accounted for 93 percent of the $1.1 billion of EEC agricultural takings from the United States in 1960. These 10 commodities have accounted for close to 90 percent of such takings during the last decade. The extent to which imports from the United States as compared with those from other countries have worsened or improved -- measured in terms of quantity -- from 1953-56 to 1957-60 is shown in the tabulation on page 9. U.S. shares of four major commodities -- cotton, feed grains, oilseeds, and fats and oils -- have improved while those of other countries have worsened. Both U.S. and other countries' shares have increased for two commodities -- feeding-stuff and rice -- but U.S. shares have improved relatively more. U.S. shares have decreased for tobacco and fresh meats while those of other countries have gained. The U.S. share of wheat and flour has been reduced, but there has been no increase in the share of other countries -- indicating progress toward self-sufficiency within the six countries. The U.S. share of the EEC market for hides and skins has held firm while that for other countries has become relatively less.

Selected Factors Affecting Trade

Selected indicators of factors affecting imports and economic growth are presented in this volume for the Common Market countries and selected countries which may become associates or full members. For each country, the indicators include (1) balance of payments, (2) official gold and short-term dollar assets, (3) exchange rates, (4) gross national product, and (5) trends in per capita agricultural imports and per capita national income levels.

Balance of payments

The balance of payments table for each country records (1) the flow of real resources, (2) changes in a country's foreign assets and liabilities resulting from all economic transactions, and (3) transfer payments representing the real and financial resources provided to or received from the rest of the world with a corresponding quid pro quo. This statement is designed to cover all economic transactions between residents of the reporting country and residents of the rest of the world. The term resident includes individuals, government, and all its agencies, subdivisions, and corporations.

During the 1951-55 period the balance of payments position of the Common Market countries was a major limiting factor affecting U.S. trade in agricultural and nonagricultural products. As the balance of payments position improved in various countries, import controls were reduced, resulting in substantial increases in U.S. commercial exports.

Between 1956 and 1960 the six Common Market countries had a combined favorable balance of payments. Surpluses on the goods and services account permitted (1) more capital funds to seek investment opportunities outside the countries of the Common Market, (2) a rise in gold and foreign exchange reserves of central governments and banking institutions, and (3) larger imports to meet growing consumer demands for food and other products.

Gold and dollar reserves of these countries doubled during this period, highlighted by rapid economic growth. Part of the increase in gold and dollar reserves is attributed to deficits in the U.S. balance of payments during recent years. In addition, the volume of export trade, as reflected in the magnitude of goods and services balances at a time when large amounts of investment capital are flowing into these economies, is largely responsible for the favored economic position of this trade area.

Foreign-held gold and dollar reserves, favorable balance of payments positions, and growth in gross national products and national incomes are but partial indicators of the capacity of these countries to increase agricultural imports from the United States. Consumer tastes, income elasticities of demand for U.S. commodities, increased domestic agricultural production, and prevailing levels of living are now probably greater influences on the magnitude of their agricultural imports. Income elasticities of demand for farm products are much lower in the advanced than in the less developed countries. This coupled with increased agricultural productivity, leading to greater intra-Community trade, will tend to limit expansion of U.S. agricultural exports to the Common Market.

National income

Imports by the Common Market countries are now much greater than in the prewar period. Increased imports by the Common Market countries from all sources are related primarily to increased purchasing power generated by higher per capita incomes. Since 1938-40 average per capita national income in the Common Market countries increased from $335 to $772, or by 130 percent. During this period, per capita imports of all commodities from all countries increased from $30 to $157, or over 4 times. Per capita imports of all commodities from the United States alone rose from $2.74 in 1938-40 to $16.80 in 1959-60, or over 5 times. However, per capita imports of U.S. farm products increased more rapidly during this period than did imports of all commodities: From 74 cents in 1938-40 to $5.91 in 1959-60, or 7 times. Most of this increase in per capita agricultural imports occurred prior to 1950. Since 1950, only the Netherlands have consistently increased their per capita imports of U.S. farm products.

With the exception of the 1953-55 period, the high level of per capita imports (around $14.00) of U.S. farm products achieved by Belgium-Luxembourg in the immediate postwar years has been maintained. While the absolute level of per capita imports of U.S. farm products by West Germany has been and remains lower than the absolute levels attained by the Benelux countries, the 24-fold increase in per capita imports (from 24 cents in 1938-40 to about $6.00 in 1959-60) was much greater than for any other Common Market country. France and Italy registered relatively small gains in per capita imports of U.S. farm products since 1938-40.

No doubt the U.S. foreign economic assistance programs initiated just after World War II were instrumental in stimulating both economic recovery and imports of U.S. farm products in the Common Market countries. The effect of these programs can be observed in table 210. These data show that, except for the Netherlands, the highest level of per capita imports occurred around 1947-49. While the Marshall Plan and other assistance programs help to explain the rapid increase in per capita imports prior to 1950, these programs cannot account for the fact that, once achieved, the high levels of per capita imports were maintained throughout this past decade while economic assistance was being reduced. Among the major factors underlying this improved import picture were higher incomes, higher living standards, and U.S. market development programs.

Tables: Explanatory Notes

The trade data have been compiled on the basis of three-digit Standard International Trade Classification (SITC) numbers listed in Statistical Bulletins published by the Organization for European Economic Cooperation (OEEC) -- now the Organization for European Cooperation and Development (OECD). Data were originally compiled for 16 SITC classifications; but combining some of the individual commodities has reduced the number of classes to the following 10: (1) Fresh, chilled or frozen meats, (2) wheat and wheat flour, (3) rice, (4) feed grains, (5) feeding-stuff for animals, (6) fats and oils, (7) unmanufactured tobacco, (8) hides and skins, (9) oilseeds, oil nuts, and oil kernels, and (10) cotton. These commodities have been presented in this order for each country and country group. Commodity descriptions have been modified in some cases.

The Statistical Bulletins contain the dollar value and metric ton information used in this volume, except that wheat flour has been converted into grain equivalent by multiplying quantities by 1.3333. In some instances, quantities have been estimated on the basis of value.

Dollar value has been reported on a cif basis (cost, insurance, and freight).

Data on total agricultural imports have been compiled on the basis of the 47 SITC classes listed on page 12. Crude rubber has been excluded because the SITC statistics covered both natural and synthetic rubber.

Dashes (---) have been used in a number of instances, particularly in 1951, to indicate that quantities and values could not be fully distributed by country of origin.

The amounts shown in the tables in this volume for imports from the United States do not in all cases equal the corresponding amounts of exports from the United States. These differences are due to variations in compiling, timing, valuation, and coverage. For example, Netherlands imports are smaller than U.S. exports because of transshipments not recorded in Dutch statistics on imports for consumption. West German imports run more than U.S. exports because of U.S. commodities received through the Netherlands. This may also be true for France. Italy's imports run below U.S. exports due to exclusion from Italian trade statistics of U.S. relief shipments. In addition, some of the differences may be due to U.S. grain shipments to Canada that are transshipped to European countries, which report them as of U.S. origin.

Sources of the data used in the financial, monetary, income, and population tables have been identified thereon.

1/ International Monetary Fund, International Financial Statistics.

2/ Spot rate. The par value has been 50.00 francs per U.S. dollar since September 22, 1948.

3/ Spot rate. From September 1949 to August 11, 1957, exchange transactions were at the official rate of 350 francs per U.S. dollar with minor fluctuations between 349 and 350. August 11, 1957, the effective exchange rate rose to 420 francs per dollar due to a 20 percent surcharge and premium added to imports and exports respectively. The surcharge and premium were incorporated into the official rate 350 in October 1957, and the official rate became 420 until the establishment of a new par value on December 29, 1958. From December 29, 1958, to January 1, 1960, the par value of the franc was 493.7 per U.S. dollar. On January 1, 1960, the franc was revalued at 4.937 new francs per U.S. dollar.

4/ The par value has been about 625 lire per dollar since September 1949. Since December 29, 1958, market rates for U.S. dollars are free to fluctuate within limits of 3/4 of 1 percent either side of the 625 rate. On this date, non-resident convertibility for the lira was established.

5/ Spot rate. The par value for the U.S. dollar was changed from 3.80 to 3.62 guilders per U.S. dollar on March 7, 1961.

6/ Spot rate. The par value for the U.S. dollar was changed from 4.20 to 4.0 deutsche marks per U.S. dollar on March 5, 1961.

7/ The currency reform of May 1, 1954, established a new drachma equal to 1,000 old drachmas. On March 29, 1961, the par value for the drachma was set at 30 per U.S. dollar.

8/ The par rate for the U.S. dollar is 6.907 kroner per dollar.

9/ The Irish pound is pegged at a par value with pound sterling. Since September 1949 the conversion factor for gold and foreign exchange has been 2.80 U.S. dollars per pound.

10/ The par rate for the U.S. dollar is 7.143 kroner per dollar.

11/ Par value of the pound (2.80 U.S. dollars per British pound).
